Dana is the practice of generosity. This practice helps remind us of the fundamental "interbeing" nature of life. By supporting our teachers, we deepen our own experience on the path of practice while helping them to support others. Teachers generously give their time and energy through listening, sharing, and teaching, often without financial reward. Offering dana makes it possible for them to continue their work and is their primary means of support. In the spirit of this tradition, there will be an opportunity for recipients of the teachings to make voluntary contributions, called dana, upon registration or at the end of the retreat. Because participants often ask what is considered appropriate, we offer the following guidelines: you may wish to make a contribution between $100-$250 for the retreat, depending on your ability. Dana is a gift given entirely from the heart.

Important Reminder: Silence and Cell Phones. This is a silent retreat with only a few limited opportunities to discuss, i.e. during formal Dharma discussions. We maintain silence at all other times during the retreat, including in one's sleeping quarters, in order to deepen our practice and set the most favorable conditions for insight and awareness. We ask that cell phone usage is strictly limited to emergencies, even within your sleeping accommodations. If you must use your cell phone, we ask that you do so off campus and away from all other retreatants. A 24-hour emergency contact number for Camp Mitchell will be provided at the retreat.
